THE ISSUE

Employee exit surveys can provide important feedback on your business operations and the workforce experience. Unfortunately, the survey process can be inefficient and disconnected from related processes. Response rates and data might not be sufficient for revealing meaningful insights about trends, risks, areas for improvement, and other needs. At German pharmaceutical giant Boehringer Ingelheim, leaders saw a huge opportunity to transform the exit survey process—to make a bigger impact on the business and the employee experience.

THE SOLUTION

Boehringer Ingelheim worked with Deloitte to deploy an integrated platform centered on SAP® solutions and designed to help elevate the employee experience while improving business processes. Capable of generating surveys and delivering analytic insights based on HR data and sentiment/experience data, the solution enables automatic workflows and alerts—supporting proactive capabilities that allow Boehringer Ingelheim to identify issues quickly and more actively manage workforce experience across the organization. The platform also has provided fresh insights based on historical data from previous survey responses and posted reviews on the Glassdoor.com website—enabled through a custom integration.
