The world is ready for CLIMATE ACTION

Deloitte surveyed 23,000 people across 23 countries

The majority of respondents believe climate change is an emergency.

In the last ten years, have you felt worried or anxious about climate change?

Most believe climate change is an emergency.

How worried or anxious have you felt about climate change over the past ten years?

Most have little to no concern about climate change.

Overall anxiety.

Climate change is a mental health issue.

About half of respondents say they have experienced climate-related events.

Have you experienced climate-related events?

Climate change has affected mental health.

My country’s national government should do more to fight climate change.

Work is strongly support the climate movement, even if it costs a personal cost.

Do you think climate change is a global issue? Globally, 15% strongly support climate change, overall, 15% of respondents were more likely to support this legislation.

As global leaders gather at COP26, one of the most important climate negotiations in years, many say they are more worried about climate change, even if it means they might not be able to travel or see friends and family, and many others say that it's not an issue that can be fixed or reduced.

Copyright © 2021 Deloitte Insights. All rights reserved.