Basis of Our Work:

Our services under this Agreement will be provided to you on the basis of all of the following:

- a) Our Work is based on the information. In certain circumstances, our Work may also be based on information that is publicly available. The following statements relating to our treatment of information also apply where we have based our Work on publicly available information. If any of the information is untrue, incorrect, incomplete or misleading, our work may be incomplete or inappropriate for you
- b) We have not audited or verified any information that you provided to us (although we may ask for clarification) unless you engaged us to do so
- c) Our Work is based on the law, regulations, accounting standards and other authorities (Tax Laws) in effect at the date of our Work. The Tax Laws frequently change, sometimes retrospectively, and key tax reform measures that are announced are sometimes deferred or unclear. If there are any significant changes in or to such Tax Laws (for which we shall have no responsibility to advise you) such changes may result in our Work being rendered out of date and necessitate on your request a reconsideration of the Work
- d) Our Work is not binding on the ATO or any other local or foreign revenue, tax or other governmental or regulatory authority or any court or tribunal and should not be considered a representation, warranty or guarantee that the ATO or any other revenue, tax or other governmental or regulatory authority or the court or tribunal will agree with our Work
- e) If we do give you access to our Work in draft (Draft Work), you may not rely on it and it is given to you solely to confirm that the Information on which we have relied in producing the Draft Work is accurate and complete, that there are no matters contained in the Draft Work that are inconsistent with your understanding of the transaction or circumstances and that you have brought to our attention all facts and matters that are relevant to the Services
- f) You are responsible for managing all aspects of your business, making all decisions and operating all accounting, internal control or management information systems
- g) We do not provide legal advice. You should consult a legal practitioner to obtain such advice if required
- h) We reserve the right, at our sole discretion, not to discuss with you schemes or arrangements which, at our sole discretion, we have decided not to promote (either at all, or to particular clients) on the grounds that either they may bring us, or our clients, into disrepute or they are not, for whatever reason, appropriate to introduce to a particular client.

Reasonable Care

The Code requires that we take reasonable care in:

- a. ascertaining a client's state of affairs, to the extent that ascertaining the state of those affairs is relevant to a statement made or a thing done on behalf of the client; and
- b. ensuring that taxation laws are applied correctly to the circumstances in relation to which we are providing advice to a client.

If, during providing the Services, a matter comes to our attention which is inconsistent with representations made by you, we will undertake reasonable enquiry to clarify the reason for the inconsistency. This may necessitate an additional scope of work to be agreed with you if further work is required to resolve the matter. We will document the scope of such work in writing and agree with you prior to the work being undertaken.

Client Verification & Proof of Identity

We are required to verify the authority and identity of our clients and their authorised individual representatives in accordance with the proof of identity requirements issued by the ATO and Tax Practitioners Board (refer TPB\(PN\) 5/2022 Proof of identity requirements for client verification). If we cannot verify the authority or identity of an individual as required by the ATO and/or TPB, we reserve the right, at our sole discretion, not to deliver our Work until we have been able to satisfactorily verify the individual in accordance with these requirements.

Disclosure of Information

The Code provides that as registered tax agents we must not disclose any information relating to your affairs to a third party without your permission. For the purposes of the Code a third party may include any other entity that may assist in providing the Services to you such as a member firm or any entity that may host or maintain offsite data storage. To the extent that our Services involve such disclosure for purposes of providing the Services to you, you give permission for such disclosure.

False or misleading statements

The Code requires that where we have made or prepared a statement to the Commissioner or the TPB on your behalf, that we later have reasonable grounds to believe was materially false or misleading (including where the statement is materially misleading due to an omission) at the time it was made, we have an obligation to advise you that the statement should be corrected, and the possible consequences for not correcting it. Where applicable, we will seek your authorisation and/ or instructions (including agreement of any fees or other terms) to correct the statement on your behalf.

If you do not correct the statement within a reasonable time, and the false or misleading nature of the statement resulted from recklessness as to the operation of a taxation law or intentional disregard of a taxation law, we have an obligation to terminate the Services including terminating our entire professional relationship with you.

In addition, where we believe that substantial harm to the financial and non-financial interests of others (including investors, creditors, employees or the public) may occur, we are required to notify the Commissioner or the TPB, and take any further action that we reasonably consider is needed in the public interest.

Disclosures to clients

Under the Code, from 1 January 2025, the Deloitte entities that are registered as tax agents must advise all current and prospective clients of certain matters. Please see this website for details.
