Enhancing Supply Chain Resilience in a New Era of Policy

Manufacturers are facing increasing pressure from supply chain disruptions, trade tensions, and evolving tariff policies. According to Deloitte's study Enhancing Supply Chain Resilience in a New Era of Policy, companies are shifting their focus from cost optimization alone to a balance of resilience, agility, and long-term competitiveness.

The study explores:

- how tariffs and trade policies could reshape manufacturing supply chains
- why resilience is becoming a strategic priority for manufacturers
- where reshoring opportunities are most economically viable
- how digital technologies can improve supply chain visibility and efficiency
- how manufacturers can assess and mitigate supply chain risks
- why workforce skills are critical to future manufacturing growth

How can manufacturers strengthen resilience while managing costs in an increasingly uncertain environment?
