AI in Procurement: When Your New Robot Colleague Needs a Babysitter

Procurement isn't typically headline-grabbing—until AI enters the scene. Suddenly, tender cycles shrink, global suppliers appear out of nowhere, and bots start negotiating better deals than humans. But along with the breakthroughs come risks: from awarding contracts to shady shell companies to ordering parts that don't fit... at all.

In this article, we dive into how AI is transforming procurement—from a Polish case study that slashed tender times by 80%, to real-world blunders involving glitter-level chaos. We explore the opportunities, pitfalls, and the human guardrails needed to keep your robot colleague from accidentally buying jet fuel or partnering with a barn.

This one really is worth the read. Seriously.
