

Mandatory e-invoicing is coming to the UAE

Will your business be compliant?

September 2024

E-invoicing is the process of generating and exchanging electronic invoices and related notes, in a digital and tax-compliant format. Tax Authorities worldwide are adopting e-invoicing obligations to drive real-time data, increase tax compliance, reduce the Value Added Tax (VAT) gap and further automate tax audits. The United Arab Emirates (UAE) is on target to introduce a mandatory e-invoicing regime by July 2026.

E-invoicing is a business-critical digital requirement that introduces compliance and transformation challenges. UAE organizations should prepare for a comprehensive implementation and involve key stakeholders. The key e-invoicing challenges for your business will be across four pillars:

How will your business be impacted?

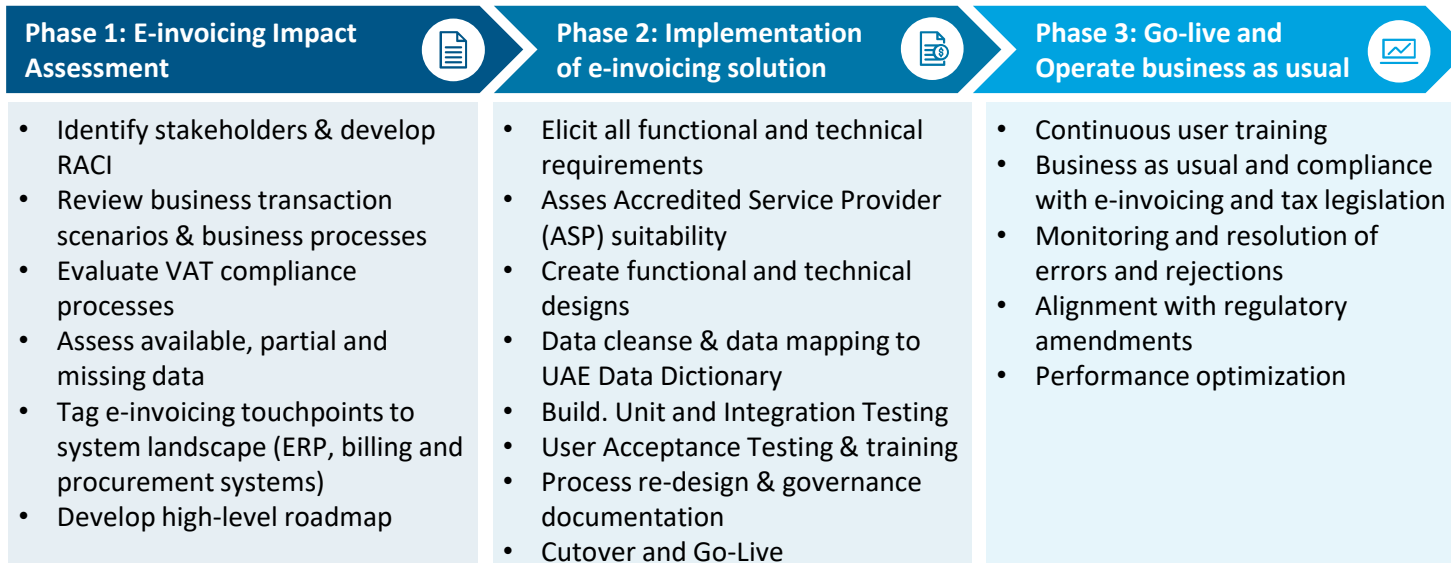

How can your organization meet the e-invoicing requirements and obligations?

Organizations need to implement an (accredited) e-invoicing solution that meets all relevant tax, legislative and IT requirements. Early adopters of e-invoicing can minimize document errors and rejections after go-live.

Identifying the optimal approach for your business challenging.

Deloitte's high-level recommended project approach includes the following:

Why should your business act now?

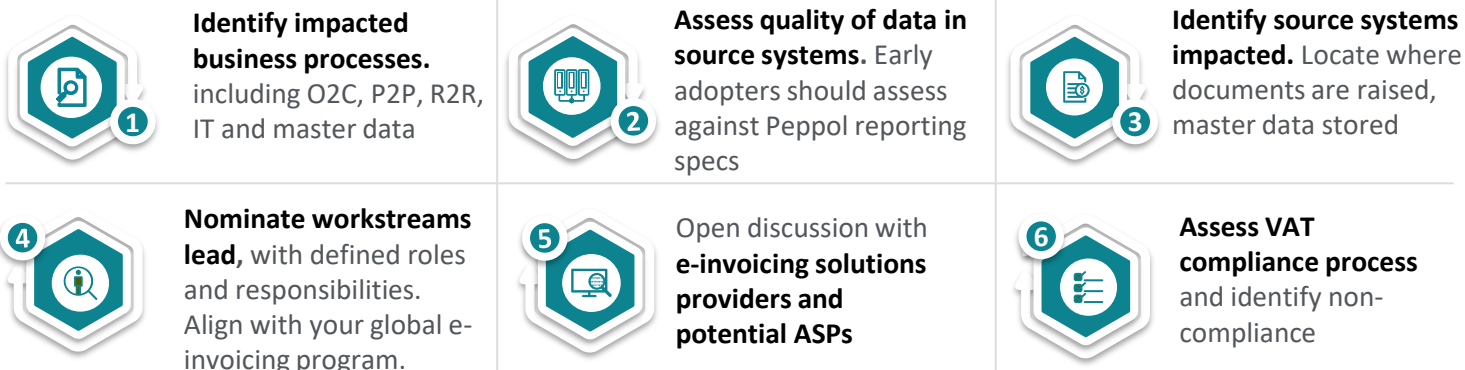

Organizations that are non-compliant with the e-invoicing and VAT regulations could be subject to penalties.

Without a clearly defined approach and ownership, organizations risk encountering implementation hurdles, overlooking potential automation benefits, facing compliance and customer challenges, and increasing exposure to tax risk.

The most successful e-invoicing projects start early. It is critical to allocate time for planning, implementation, and testing to achieve a seamless and successful rollout.

Deloitte can support your business with end-to-end e-invoicing implementation, including tax advisory, functional and IT technical guidance.
