

Our insights help identify workers' views on the future of remote working, wellbeing, digital skills and inclusion, how technology has enhanced, and will continue to enhance, their productivity and the role it plays in enabling a safe return to workplaces.

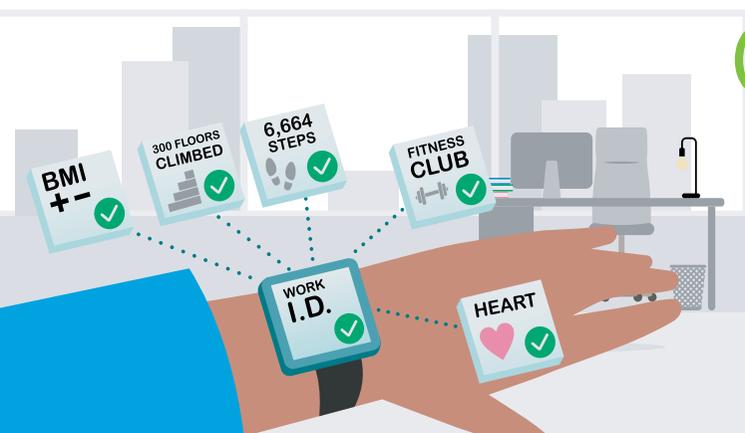

7.5 million workers are keen to permanently work from home every day of the week

1/4 of workers feel overwhelmed by all the different technologies they need to use for work

59% of respondents think that technology has been essential in enabling them to continue to work during the pandemic

52% of UK workers think that wellbeing has become more of a priority for their employer since lockdown

Almost half (46%) of workers across the UK would share their personal health data with their employers in order to improve their wellbeing at work

35% of respondents feel that the pandemic brought a much needed change in the way they perform their role through the use of technology

70% expect their employer to be supportive of their desire to choose how often they should work from home in the future

45% feel their confidence in using technology at work has increased in the past 12 months