

Resilient podcast series

Sarah ElRaheb-Dagher on the art of storytelling for lawyers

Building relationships, motivating teams, and driving change

Host:

Lori Lorenzo, Research & Insights director, Chief Legal Officer Program, Deloitte Transactions and Business Analytics LLP

Guest:

Sarah ElRaheb-Dagher, educator, leadership coach, and pedagogy specialist, Harvard Kennedy School

Lori Lorenzo: Welcome to Resilient. I'm Lori Lorenzo, Deloitte's research and insights director for our Chief Legal Officer Program and host of the Resilient Chief Legal Officer track.

What does it mean to be a values-based leader, and how do you help others to connect with your values? You tell stories about the moments that shaped you. In this episode, Sarah ElRaheb-Dagher, educator, leadership coach, and pedagogy specialist at Harvard Kennedy School, reflects on how storytelling taught her about the power of education, understanding others, and finding her voice.

Sarah kicks off our legal influencer series, a subseries of the Resilient CLO track, that focuses on leaders who have interesting and important skills and insights that CLOs can use to support their own professional journeys.

As our first legal influencer guest, Sarah shares how legal executives can use storytelling as an effective tool to build relationships, motivate teams, and drive change.

Sarah ElRaheb-Dagher: Part of the art of storytelling is thinking about how do I paint visual moments of challenge, of hurt, of choice that bring me to where I am today?

And how do I communicate those in such a way that it's accessible and it's also concise?

Lori Lorenzo: I hope you enjoyed this preview for the full episode. Go to your favorite podcast app and search "resilient."
